

Freedom of Thought

The subject of “Freedom of Thought” is not meaning that we can ignore any or all of the correct rituals of Clergy teachings.

Freedom of thought pertains to each person understanding that each of us have our level of learning, and others should not ram their opinions down the throats of those who are not as yet ready to absorb many things. Advice and teaching is good, but beware that we do not get too zealous in our attempt to teach others, and therefore unwittingly, but with the best intention, overload them.

Face the fact that if we try to force advanced teaching upon other members of humanity who are not yet ready for it, we may create dire problems for the person we are supposedly trying to assist. If a person is not yet ready to understand certain things, then it is wrong for us to try to push these things upon them. We wouldn't try to push advanced mathematics upon a person in kindergarten. The same principle applies. When the person is ready they will themselves seek the knowledge they require. It is then that we must be ready to give as we were freely given and until then, each person must retain the freedom to proceed at their own pace.
